Miners Refuse To Grant Government Time.

PLAN OF PREMIER TO CONTROL MINES

Peaceful Effort at Settlement Is Rejected.

Feared a Nationwide Industrial Upheaval Can Not Be Averted. Transport and Rail Men Are Threatening Strike.

[illegible] 5.—Hopes for [illegible] British industrial [illegible] the coal strike, re[illegible] a setback, this afternoon [illegible] Labor Minister Horne, [illegible] of the preliminary de[illegible] suggestions of an [illegible] government con[illegible] miners and coal pending [illegible] a settlement.

It was a plan, which was supposed to be favored by Premier Lloyd George was seen the last ray of hope for averting a general economic industrial upheaval, with the transport workers and the rail men joining the miners.

Almost simultaneously with this development, it was announced that all army leaves have been stopped. A similar measure had been previously announced for the navy and this was regarded as further indication that the government reckons with the necessity of strong military measures to prevent labor disturbances on a large scale.

J. R. Clines, former food controller and now one of the strongest labor leaders in parliament, attacked the government during the debate for its methods of handling the situation. He urged it, however, to bring the contesting parties together, saying:

"It is better to think it out than to fight it out."

A Grave Crisis

London, April 5.—"The present industrial crisis is as grave as any we had during the war and might easily develop into a national conflagration," Lord Curzon, foreign minister, said in the house of commons this afternoon.

Troops Distributed.

London, April 5.—Ten thousand troops, recalled from Ireland, have arrived in England and are being distributed in the coal fields, the International News service learned, this afternoon.

For Settlement.

London, April 5.—When Premier Lloyd George opens the debate on the great coal strike, in the house of commons, this afternoon, he will propose that the coal mines remain under government control for another month to allow time for a settlement of the dispute between the miners and owners.

The International News service learns from an authoritative source that this will be the government's proposition. It was the return of the mines from government control to private ownership that led to the present semi-paralysis of the kingdom's industries and the threat of the railway men and transport workers forming the 1,200,000 idle miners. For the change was followed by attempts on the part of the mine owners to reduce wages downward.

Today, the crisis is gaining a firmer grip upon the nation's affairs and the mine tieup by increasing violence.

It was reported early today that the collieries near the little mining village of Bentley, Hampshire. There a band of striking miners, headed by pickpipes, overpowered the men and attacked the workers who refused to walk out.

Police and several employes were injured. The rioters penetrated the pit of one mine and smashed machinery.

In addition, an overseer was killed and a manager seriously injured in a mine explosion, the cause of which is still undetermined but is expected to be due to gas.

Yesterday a group of miners broke into a barber shop, marched on the furnaces and forced the blacksmith and other workers to abandon their jobs.

A Shrewd Play

Labor comments reported prophesied in all quarters to be a shrewd play for time. Even those sympathizers with the miners' cause believe the miners will be forced to accept it without

MAY STABILIZE THE EXCHANGE

And Build Up Foreign Trade for United States.

STATE DEPARTMENT EXPERTS AT WORK

Framing Plan To Be Followed by Consular Agents.

Stress Laid on Buying and Investment Abroad as Well as Selling Products of the Industries of America.

Washington, April 5.—A new plan for stabilizing exchange and at the same time building up foreign trade has been worked out by state department experts and is about to be put into operation, it was learned today. A tentative outline of the plan sent to American consular agents all over the world, is said to be meeting with an enthusiastic response.

The novelty of the new program consist of the fact that emphasis is laid upon buying and investment rather than upon selling, in foreign markets. Heretofore, the chief duty of American consuls has been to find markets for American commodities. Manufacturers of practically every article made in America, at one time or another, have called upon the state department to ascertain through its consular agents where new markets can be found for their products.

With the dollar at a premium all over the world, this is practically the situation which confronts the United States in many of the great markets of the world, today, state department experts say. They point out that trade should be a reciprocal affair, that there are certain commodities which the United States must purchase abroad because they are not grown at home and others probably which could be secured abroad more reasonably.

Consular agents, are therefore, instructed to report that commodities may be purchased in their territories more cheaply than in the United States and are also directed to report upon the possibility for investment of American capitalists in industries which may later yield commodities for export to America. In this way, it is pointed out, exports and imports can be kept more nearly at a balance, exchange will tend to greater stability and trade will be continuous instead of remaining at the mercy of an erratic exchange rate.

New York, April 5.—After displaying an irregular undertone at the opening, today, the stock market turned strong and the leading issues rose from fractions to nearly two points.

CHARLES WILL QUIT COUNTRY

Signs Agreement To Leave Hungary Quickly.

HE IS REPORTED ON WAY TO SWITZERLAND

Former Ruler's Hand Is Forced by the Allies.

Charles Is Informed That No Member of the Hapsburg Family Will Be Allowed To Take Throne of Hungary.

London, April 5.—Ex-Emperor Charles is reported to have left Steinamanger, Hungary, and to be on his way to Switzerland, according to dispatches received here, this afternoon. Previous despatches to the Star, from Vienna, said he was to leave at 10 o'clock this morning.

Signs Agreement.

Steinamanger Hungary, April 4—[Through London, April 5.]—Charles, ex-emperor of Austria, actually has signed an agreement to leave Hungary "for the good of the country," but an attack of bronchitis makes it impossible for him, to leave before the end of the week. The whole affair is expected to be settled not later than Saturday. Hungarian Foreign Minister Graz arrived from Budapest this—Monday—afternoon and pointed out to the ex-ruler that the situation "had gone too far." Charles then signed, in the presence of Graz and Count Sigray, governor of West Hungary, an agreement to leave Hungary, which read:

"Owing to the external situation, I consent to leave Hungary, believing it to be in the best interests of the country that I should not remain here."

The news of the agreement was immediately communicated to Budapest and the actual document was taken to Admiral Horthy, the Hungarian regent, by aeroplane. According to those who are in close touch with Karl, his hand was forced by the entente's ultimatum, conveyed through the council of ambassadors, that under no circumstances would a Hapsburg be allowed to resume the throne of Hungary. The recent demobilization of the Hungarian army, in accordance with the peace treaty, is also said to have had a determining influence upon his course.

The date of his departure is uncertain, owing to his illness. Doctors say he will have to remain in bed at least three days—which would mean until Thursday—and a British physician who was called into consultation, pronounced that he was suffering from bronchitis and was unfit to travel for a few days.

May Cancel Order.

Geneva, April 5.—The Swiss federal council decided, today, that it will cancel its permission to ex-emperor Charles, of Austria, to return to Switzerland, if he further delays his departure from Hungary.

The council also reserved the right to deport the ex-ruler if the results of an inquiry into his alleged activities warrant it.

CONFIDENT PRISONER IS THE GUILTY MAN

Cleveland Officer Sure Defective Murders Two Teachers.

Cleveland, April 5.—Sheriff C. E. Stannard said this morning, that he is confident that the suspect under arrest for some time in connection with the murder of Misses Mabel Foote and Louise Wolf, Parma school teachers is the guilty man. A conference will be held with county prosecutor, today, to determine whether an indictment will be asked, or whether the man shall be committed to an insane asylum.

According to officials, his mentality is that of a child of four.

STATE BONUS FOR EX-SERVICE MEN

Every Michigan Soldier To Receive Not Less Than $250.

Detroit, April 5.—The state bonus for ex-service men, providing $15 a month for every Michigan soldier in the great war, has carried by three to one, returns show today. Under the plan, no soldier can receive more than $250.

In the street-car fight, the municipal purchase plan, providing for the purchase of the lines of the D. U. R. by the city, seems to have carried, while the service-at-cost ordinance, which had the support of the D. U. R., was defeated.

AN ORPHANS HOME SCHOOL IS BURNED

Kansas City, April 5.—Fire, starting in the St. Joseph's orphan-home school shortly before 10 o'clock, today, endangered the lives of 150 children. First reports from the building said all the children had been saved. Several sisters fought their way through smoke and flame to save a score of youngsters sick in bed. The building is destroyed.

MOSCOW TAKES A DRASTIC STEP

Made Necessary by Failure of Economic Scheme.

ALL FACTORIES TO BE DENATIONALIZED

Moscow Factories Turned Over to Former Owners.

Announcement of a Change in Policy Causes Great Surprise and May Hasten American Trade Relations.

Paris, April 5.—The soviet government, according to advices from Moscow to the French foreign office today, has decided to denationalize all factories. They are beginning with those in the Moscow district. The Russian economic failure is given as the reason. The factories are being turned back to their former foreign owners for exploitation.

[The above despatch may be of tremendous significance since it indicates a momentous change in the economic policy of the soviet government, which is not unlike the recent report of the recent proposal of the American state department, in which Secretary Hughes announced America would be glad to resume peaceful trade relations with Russia provided that Moscow gave proof of a peaceful, safe and sound foundation for such relations. The Paris foreign office, being reluctant to the soviets, may be supposed to have given the news from Moscow its own interpretation.]

To Send Delegate to Russia

San Francisco, April 5.—The American labor alliance for trade relations with soviet Russia at a meeting here gave endorsement to a delegate elected by the federation of Richmond to attend an international conference of labor unions in Moscow, it was announced by the executive committee this afternoon.

FRENCH ENVOY LEARNS FACTS

America Will Doubtless End War with Germany.

CONGRESS WILL PASS NEEDED RESOLUTION

Leaders Are Going Ahead Formally To End War.

Knox Resolution May Be Introduced in Senate Next Week and Rushed Through to Passage Without Delay.

Washington, April 5.—With no apparent opposition coming from the White House or state department, Republican leaders in the senate are going ahead with plans to end the war with Germany by passage of a resolution. Unless direct orders to the contrary are received from the White House, this week, the Knox resolution will be reintroduced soon after the senate convenes next Monday and pushed to a vote.

It was learned, today, that President Harding has not discussed at any length the subject of peace by resolution with members of the foreign-relations committee. In his informal conversations, however, the president has not indicated that the passage of the Knox resolution was in any way incompatible with the administration's wishes. Secretary of State Hughes, so far as is known, has not expressed an opinion on the desirability of peace by resolution.

The peace resolution, however, has been the subject of long and earnest conversations between Rene Viviani, the special envoy of France and Republican members of the foreign-relations committee. The French regarded the Knox resolution as a thing of terror, seeing in it a notice to the world that the United States was putting away from her late allies and making a separate peace with Germany, with no safeguard for France's future safety.

When the purpose and intent of the Knox resolution were fully explained to M. Viviani, and he was assured that when finally presented it would contain a "declaration of policy" warning Germany that the United States would regard future German militaristic moves as directly menacing American interests, the distinguished Frenchman is reported to have thrown his hands aloft in a characteristic gesture and exclaimed: "Voila!"

Gets Information.

Washington, April 5.—M. Viviani, French envoy to this country, is understood to have been informed at a dinner at the home of Senator McCormick, of Illinois, that the Harding administration intends to end the war between the United States and Germany by congressional resolution.

The former premier also was informed, it was said by senators present, that the program of the administration does not contemplate entrance of the United States into the league of nations.

Those at the dinner said M. Viviani had been told frankly that it was useless to discuss the possibility of American membership in the league of nation. Most of the Republican members of the senate foreign relations committee and Colonel George Harvey, of New York, prospective ambassador at the Court of St. James, were among those present.

The French envoy, who was accompanied by Ambassador Jusserand, was said to have been informed that sentiment of Republican leaders was unanimous for adoption of the Knox separate peace resolution, subject only to possible amendment from its original form, early in the special session of congress. M. Viviani was described as appearing "reconciled" to the situation.

At the same time the senators made it clear that the United States would take no action which could be in any way considered as "helpful" to Germany, especially in the matter of settlement.

She is eighteen years old, and the daughter of George W. Gibbs, of New York, and a granddaughter of the late Governor Gibbs, of Texas. They were married by a justice of the peace at Greenwich, Connecticut.

GERMAN PUBLIC KEPT IN DARK

Contents of American Note Not Made Public.

GERMAN PRESS ASKS FOR THE DOCUMENTS

Hugo Stinnes Bitterly Resents Stand Taken by the United States on War Guilt.

Berlin, April 5.—The exchange of notes between Germany and the United States was the conspicuously featured subject in the German press, today, but at this cabling the German public was still in the dark as to the exact contents of Secretary of State Hughes' answer to Foreign Minister Simons' recent memorandum.

No direct reports have yet reached Berlin from America and the despatches from Paris and London are conflicting.

The Taeglische Rundschau suggests that the foreign office publish the text of the documents. The paper denies the statement publ[illegible] in the Petit Parisien, that the American note demands Germany's recognition of the war guilt.

[Note.—Secretary Hughes says in his memorandum despatched to Berlin: "This government stands with the government of the allies in holding Germany responsible for the war, and therefore, morally bound to make reparations, so far as may be possible."]

Theodor Wolff, editor of the Berliner Tageblatt, says that Loring Dresel, American charge here, visited Dr. Simons, two weeks ago Sunday and asked the foreign minister to outline Germany's standpoint concerning reparations. Simons, according to Wolff, explained it and gave Dresel the customary "aide memoire" — diplomatic memorandum. Wolff adds that the importance of this visit and of what followed has been "tremendously exaggerated."

FARRELL MAY BE HEAD OF BOARD

Shipping Board Chairmanship Tendered, Says Report.

NOW PRESIDENT OF STEEL CORPORATION

President Harding Intends To Build Shipping Board Around Its Chairman.

Washington, April 5.—President Harding has offered the chairmanship of the United States shipping board to James A. Farrell, of Pittsburgh, president of the United States steel corporation, according to reliable reports here today.

It is reported that Farrell has agreed to give the president his answer by April 9, on whether he can accept. Should Farrell accept and well informed shipping men believe he will, he probably will require until June 1 to settle his personal affairs before qualifying for the board.

President Harding has said that he intends to build the new shipping board around its chairman. Those members of the board are known to have been finally selected: Former Senator George Chamberlain of Oregon and former Brigadier General Frank Hines, who was chief of transportation in the A. E. F. It is believed likely, also, that a place will be found for Admiral Benson, the present chairman, because of his wide knowledge of the board's activities. If Mr. Farrell accepts the chairmanship of the board, it is expected that the president will then announce the complete personnel.

Rates Suspended.

Washington, April 5.—The interstate commerce commission, today, further suspended, until May 28 the operation of certain schedules providing for increased class and commodity rates on the Pittsburgh, New Orleans & Texas Pacific railroad between the Ohio river crossings and Cumberland river landings.

NOTE TO JAPAN SHARP IN TONE

Addressed by United States in Yap Controversy.

COVERS SUBJECT OF VARIOUS MANDATES

And Outlines American Policy in the Pacific.

United States Refuses To Be Bound by Agreement Between Great Britain and Japan Touching the Islands.

Washington, April 5.—The United States has addressed a new note to Japan on the Yap controversy and the subject of mandates in general, which is understood to be much sharper in tone than any of its predecessors, it was learned here today.

The new communication is the latest in a series of diplomatic exchanges which has taken place between the two governments since the international cables conference began, trying to dispose of the former German cables in the Pacific, to which Japan had stubbornly advanced claims under the mandate powers assigned her by the league of nations.

Copies of the communication have been forwarded to the governments of Great Britain and France as interested parties in the mandate controversy, it was also learned.

It is understood that the United States positively declined to admit in this communication that this government ever gave its consent to the division of the islands of the Pacific, north and south of the equator, between Great Britain and Japan.

Under this division, Japan was to get all the islands north of the equator, while Great Britain secured those south. This government has steadfastly declined to recognize the justice or validity of this agreement and has emphasized more strongly than ever before in the new communication that the United States can not accept such an arrangement.

A Proposal.

The note was sent, it is understood, in pursuance with the suggestion contained in the communication received from the league of nations, March 1, that the United States send a representative to take up the allied supreme council the mandate differences. In this communication, it was proposed to postpone further decisions on mandates of class A and B, in order to allow the United States to be represented. It was stated, however, that there could be no postponement of class C mandates, because these had already been disposed of at Geneva. Yap is a class C mandate.

The reply of the United States, it is understood, sets forth with considerable vigor that without the World war there would have been no mandates and the United States—as an equal contributor to the winning of the war—is entitled to an equal share in the fruits of victory.

The note asserts, it is understood that the United States has never surrendered, at the Paris peace conference, at the seat of the league of nations in Geneva, or elsewhere, her rights to share equally in the benefits to be derived from the disposition of former German property.

This government insists, with vigor upon its rights to be consulted as to the forms and the terms of mandates distributed and to participate in any benefits under these mandates. It is in this connection, it is understood that the note also made mention of the Mesopotamian oil fields, where France and Great Britain have secured a monopoly.

TWO BODIES FOUND EARLY THIS MORNING

Circumstances Point to Murder and Suicide.

Cleveland, April 5.—The bodies of Mr and Mrs. J. T. Wotaky were found, early this morning, on the Cleveland-Akron road, three miles south of Brecksville. It is believed that Wotaky first killed his wife and then turned his revolver upon himself. It is said that Mrs. Wotaky had been contemplating filing a suit for divorce and papers tending to corroborate this theory were found on her body.

Wotaky was superintendent of the Advance Engineering company. Two diamond rings on the woman's fingers and a diamond shirt stud and other valuables found on the body of the man, discount the theory of murder, at least with robbery as the motive.

PACT TO REMAIN IN PIGEONHOLE

President Will Never Resubmit Versailles Treaty.

POSITION IN MATTER INDICATED TODAY

The Administration Will Move Prudently in International Affairs—Cabinet Meeting.

Washington, April 5 President Harding indicated strongly, today, that he will never resubmit the treaty of Versailles to congress and that so far as his administration is concerned, the covenant brought back from Paris by Woodrow Wilson has been shelved.

This indication of the future of the treaty was given by the president when he received newspaper correspondents after the regular cabinet meeting. It was made clear by the president, however, that neither he nor his administration is committed to any definite program of international affairs.

The present world condition and other considerations have convinced the leaders of the new administration, however, that there is no practical way in which the treaty of Versailles can be considered. It was emphasized that the course of international procedure of the new administration is going to be a prudent one. The program may come along piecemeal, or it may come along in blocks, but neither the president nor his advisers see in the present situation any need for precipitate action. The president is not definitely committed to the immediate passage of the Knox resolution, declaring an end to the state of war with Germany. Neither is he committed to delaying the introduction or the passage of that resolution.

The future of the Knox resolution will be threshed out, it is understood, within the next two weeks with the chances decidedly in favor of its passage. The president, himself, recalled, today, that he had voted for the Knox resolution while sitting as a member of the United States senate and that he had spoken in favor of it.

First Message.

President Harding's first message to congress will deal largely with domestic affairs, although foreign relations will be touched upon, it was indicated. The president, it is understood, already has commenced a draft of his message, but it will not be complete until the opening day of congress. President Harding is inclined to favor the plan of former President Wilson of delivering his message in person and probably will read his message upon the convening of congress.

The cabinet, today, discussed a number of relatively minor affairs, embracing, however, some very interesting domestic aspects. Secretary Hoover brought to the attention of the cabinet the confused condition surrounding radio transmission in this country, pointing out that there was no regulation relating to sending and receiving, or to wave lengths, or the connections between the radio and land-wire stations.

At the end of the discussion, the state, war, navy, commerce and post-office departments were asked to designate technical representatives to meet as a special commission to work out a plan of regulation which will be submitted to congress. The problem of getting back to "normalcy" in the building trade was discussed very generally, at the cabinet meeting.

Further discussion of a helpful program in regard to the railway situation was entered into and progress was reported along this line.

Rail Situation.

President Harding has not yet consulted with the managerial part of the railroads. His discussions thus far have been with the representatives of employes and governmental officials. It was announced that the president would go further and more representatives of the managerial interests and if the conferences develop a plan of solution, it will be put into practice.

President Harding [illegible] has not yet determined whether his report to congress of the railroad situation will be incorporated in his first message or whether it will be the subject of a special message.

SETTLEMENT BLOCKED BY OPEN-SHOP ISSUE

Cleveland Rail People Unable To Reach Agreement.

[illegible] conferences between [illegible] managers, and conductors and trainmen on the open-shop issue, the essential one of the wage cuts agreed to, except a reduction of pay amounting to ten cents an hour for machinists, was turned down flat, it was authoritatively stated today, at union headquarters, that the men, while agreeing to arbitrate hours and rates of pay were unwilling to submit to an arbitral board the "closed shop" principle upon which the street railways have operated for some time.

President John J. Stanley is equally insistent that the entire matter must go to arbitration. Further conferences will be held.

RAIL PROBLEMS WILL BE AIRED

Brotherhood Heads To Meet President Harding.

WAGE REDUCTIONS TO BE CONSIDERED

Leaders of Railway Men Are Invited to White House To Go Over Situation.

Washington April 5 — President Harding will confer this week with two more railroad brotherhood chiefs, who have received invitations from the president.

W. S. Carter, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, has an appointment with the president this afternoon, and Warren S. Stone, grand chief of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, has an appointment with Mr. Harding tomorrow.

The invitation to Messrs Carter and Stone did not state the subject upon which the president desired to talk with them, but it is assumed by their associates that the chief executive will seek their attitude on wage reductions as well as the general railroad problem.

President Harding heard A. B. Garretson, former head of the Order of Railway Conductors, and B. M. Jewell, president of the railway department of the American Federation of Labor. After their conferences both men said they had discussed the situation generally, but had received no indication from the president as to his attitude or the policy he might have had in mind.

SMALL PIN BREAKS; TOWN CLOCK STOPS

After About Twelve Hours It Is Started Again.

People who depend upon the court-house clock were inconvenienced not a little Monday afternoon and night and until 9 o'clock this morning, as the clock stopped at 4:20 o'clock. A small pin in the clock works broke off and the fact that the clock stopped was not noticed by Sherman Dixon, court-house janitor, until it was too dark to make the repairs Monday afternoon. There are no lights in the court-house tower where the clock is located. Mr. Dixon made the repairs this morning and the clock was started at 9 o'clock.

A rather unusual coincidence is the fact that just twenty years ago today the clock stopped. That time, however, the stopping was due to the failure of the janitor to wind it.

APPRECIATIVE BUT ADAMANT

Official Attitude of Germany on Hughes Note.

VIEWS EXPRESSED AT FOREIGN OFFICE

Officials Say Germany Must Solve Her Problems by Increase in Productivity.

Berlin, April 5 — The attitude of adamant of Germany's official attitude toward the note of Secretary of State Charles Evans Hughes [illegible] by Walter Simons, foreign minister, was not in fact altered by having gone to Bremen for a few days, but the correspondent was able to learn from one of the officials at the foreign office that the reply to the German official was:

"Our official attitude toward President Harding's note, the Associated News service was informed, is that it strengthens Germany's contention that the only solution lies in increased activity and productivity.

"This is especially emphasized in the last sentence of the note."

[Note—The last sentence referred to the hope of the United States that a resumption of trade between Germany and the allies "on a new basis, may lead to a prompt settlement which will at the same time satisfy the just claims of the allies and permit Germany hopefully to renew its productivity."]

"The note does not change Germany's position and introduces nothing new. Therefore, its only importance is in America's opinion of tone and her fairness, which we appreciate."

TO GIVE PROOF OF GRATITUDE

America Would Show Veterans Its Appreciation.

PRESIDENT HARDING WRITES OF SITUATION

Addresses Charles G. Dawes Regarding Relief for Disabled Warriors of Country.

Washington April 5—The American people want to prove the public gratitude to those who served in the World war President Harding declared, today, in a letter addressed to the committee headed by Charles G. Dawes of Chicago which he has appointed to investigate the measures for relief of disabled soldiers.

The president advised the committee, which is holding its first meeting here today, not to investigate the intent of the laws providing relief, declaring that it is well understood that "the law intends to deal justly and generously" with the veterans but he urged the committee to inquire thoroughly into the failures to care for these men and abuses which may have arisen.

The committee came to an agreement that all soldier relief work should be consolidated under one authority. At the present time there are three bureaus caring for financial relief vocational education and physical care. The committee voted unanimously to recommend to the president that the work of the bureau of war risk insurance, the public health service, insofar as it deals with soldier relief, and the board of vocational education should be consolidated under one head.

F. W. Galbraith, head of the American legion, proposed this recommendation. The president's letter was as follows:

Letter to Dawes.

My dear General Dawes and members of committee.

"I have asked you to meet and make an investigation of the administration of the law in caring for the crippled and impaired soldiers in the late World war. There have been numerous complaints that the government is neglecting the becoming care of the defenders to whom it owes every consideration and there is further complaint that there is tardiness in dealing with them and their claims which grew out of their service. I should like you to make diligent inquiries of department heads, or with those associated with them, in an effort to find out just where the government agencies are in any way lacking in authority, neglectful or failing to carry out what is the unquestioned intent of the congress in its enactment of laws and in making of appropriations.

"There need be no inquiry into the intent of the government, because I think it is well understood that every agency desired to deal justly and generously with those of its defenders who were impaired in the nation's defense.

"I think it would be well, while you are making inquiries as to the failure of these service men, that you also make inquiries in to the abuses which have developed and look carefully into the regulations adopted, so that you may know their probable effects in the future. It is well to realize that the American people want to improve the republic's gratitude to these men. The regulations and policies adopted at this time are very likely to be in effect for a full half century to come. In order to deal justly with these men and carry out a permanent policy, it is exceedingly important that we start on a firm foundation.

To Give Information.

"I have asked Brigadier General Sawyer to meet with your committee and make available to you such information as you may desire, which he has gathered as the representative of the executive in investigating the relation of the several departments of government dealing with this problem. I do not imagine your committee will care to enter into a widely extended taking of testimony, but that you will be able to gather from department heads and officials responsible for this service such information as you may require to pass judgment on the program adopted and make recommendations as to our future course.

"I hope to have you report to me formally the situation which you develop, so that I may in turn report it to the congress and to the American people. It will be helpful if your report of conditions is accompanied by such recommendations as in the judgment of your committee will serve to completely remedy them.

"Warren G. Harding."

Colonel F. W. Galbraith Jr., national commander of the American legion, said that the needs for the centralized bureaus which can be spread over the country in order that the needy men can be found and that assistance can be given promptly. He said the need for additional hospitals was great.

A daughter was born Monday to Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Elliott of Fourteen street.

DETERMINED TO GET ALL FACTS IN CASE

Representative Kahn Insists on Probe of Bergdoll Case.

Washington, April 5.—Determined to get at the bottom of the escape of Grover Cleveland Bergdoll, the millionaire draft dodger, Representative Julius Kahn, of California, announced today that he intended to demand of the house, in the next session, the appointment of a special committee to make a thorough investigation.

Kahn has been balked twice in a similar effort. Resolutions for an investigation into the escape of Bergdoll introduced into the house at the last session of congress were permitted to die.

"The people are entitled to know how Bergdoll made his escape from his military guard at Philadelphia and the details of his flight through this country into Canada and thence to England and Germany," said Kahn. "If he had help in making his escape, it should be known and the persons helping him should be known."

SWINDLERS ARE UNDER ARREST

Confess To Defrauding Chicago Wholesale Grocers.

SECURE $300,000 IN PAST SIX YEARS

Four Arrested and an Additional Conspirator Is Being Sought by the Police.

Chicago, April 5.—Indictment of the members of a band of swindlers alleged to have defrauded the Durand & Kasper company, wholesale grocers, out of more than $300,000 in the last six years, was expected, today, to follow the arrest and confession of four men. The arrest of an additional conspirator is sought.

Max Goodman, former bookkeeper; J. J. Dorter, Alex Wineburger and J. Iandola, former salesmen, are the men under arrest. Goodman is said to have confessed that he induced the others to turn over their collections to him. The money was then split between the conspirators and Goodman "doctored" the books to conceal the thefts. The others under arrest, police say, have confirmed Goodman's statements.

Goodman recently was discharged and fear that the thefts would be discovered caused him to write a letter to Miss Elsie Suhring, the new bookkeeper, asking her to resign so that he could get his position back. Miss Suhring turned the letter over to her employers and an audit of the books revealed the shortages.

COLUMBUS REJECTS ALL BIDS FOR COAL

Is Offered Coal at $1.85 a Ton Aboard Cars at Mines.

Columbus, April 5.—Last fall H. Clayton Cain, secretary of the city board of purchase, rejected all bids for coal because more would be available when lake trade colsed in November.

Yesterday the board of purchase on Cain's advice, repected all bids for coal, the reason being that lake trade soon would open, releasing more coal.

Stagnation of manufacturing plants is the explanation Cain offers. He points out that plants were running last fall, using nut, pea and slack screened from lake shipments. When lake trade ceased for the winter Cain predicted lump coal would drop and that screenings from it, nut pea and slack also would sell at reduced quotations. His prediction was right and the city saved approximately $2.00 a ton last winter.

This spring however, the reasoning works in just the opposite manner, due to the fact that factories are not in the market for industrial coal, Cain asserts. With the opening of lake shipments of coal, consisting mostly of lump coal, the supply of nut, pea and slack coal will set at the lump shipments, will be increased, Cain thinks. With a good supply and practically no demand on the part of industries, he predicts nut, pea and slack coal will sell at lower quotations within a month.

Bids rejected yesterday, averaged $1.85 a ton f.o.b. cars at the mines. Council last night authorized Cain to buy coal on the open market until July 1.

ALLEGED AMNESIA VICTIM IS WANTED

Deserted Wife Believes Man Feigns Disease.

Cleveland, April 5.—Cuyahoga county officials are hurrying to Broughdale, a village near London, Ontario, today to bring back for trial James Val Morton, to face a charge of having deserted his wife and two minor children.

Morton received much newspaper notice last November, when he walked into a doctor's office in Indianapolis and said "I don't know who I am; nor where I live. My mind is a complete blank."

Doctors subjected him to many tests for amnesia. His picture was published broadcast by newspapers. Mrs. Morton saw it in a Cleveland paper and recognized her husband who had disappeared from Canton, where he was employed by the Mid-West Oil company, about two weeks previously. A touching reunion occurred at the hospital and Morton returned with his wife to Cleveland.

Later he disappeared again and recently was located at Broughdale. Believing that the amnesia was feigned, his wife asked his indictment upon the charge of desertion.

The five state chairmen were Mrs. J. B. Doughty, Ethical Home economics, Mrs. J. L. Kelly, Greenville, loan scholarship, Miss Genevieve Cline, Cleveland, [illegible] education, Dr. Josephine Pierce Lima, child welfare, and Mrs. Pearl Frank, Crestline, [illegible] Convention features included a parliamentary [illegible] conducted by Mrs. C. R. Skinner, Cleveland, state parliamentarian, assisted by R. A. Crumb, Mansfield, a playlet, "Dear Little Wife," presented by Mrs. J. C. Widdoes, Mrs. James Wallace and Mrs. Charles Jolliff all of Mansfield. Dr. H. W. Kellog, superintendent of the Mansfield reformatory, spoke in the place of John J. CARL KIRKPATRICK DIES FROM INJURIES

Falls on Broken Fork Handle Near Waldo.

Waldo, O., April 5.—[Special.]—Carl Kirkpatrick, who was seriously injured yesterday morning when he fell on the broken handle of a pitch fork, died in the Jane Case hospital in Delaware this morning at 3 o'clock.

Mr. Kirkpatrick, who was working on the Frank Grady farm, south of here, had gone into the haymow to get hay and had taken the fork with the broken handle with him. Finding a good fork in the mow he threw the broken one down and shortly afternoon slipped and fell striking his right side on the broken handle of the fork which penetrated the body about eight inches. The injured man managed to pull the fork handle out without assistance.

Mr. Kirkpatrick was twenty-seven years of age and came here about a month ago from south of Norton. He is survived by his widow, three small children, five brothers and one sister, Lee, who reside at the C. H. Wilson home, south of Norton; [illegible] of Kilbourne, Orville, of Sunbury, Charles and Irene, of Akron, and Walter who is in the regular army and now stationed in Panama.

Thin Folks

Who want to put on good, firm, flesh, increase their weight to normal and build up plenty of nerve force and vitality should try eating a little Vitamon with their meals. VITAMON supplies the body with the real health-giving nourishment called the vitamines which are now lost in the cooking of such everyday foods as potatoes, bread, rice, etc.

Here is a simple test well worth trying. First weigh and measure yourself, next take Vitamon—two tablets with every meal. Then weigh and measure yourself again each week and continue taking Vitamon regularly until you are satisfied with your gain in weight and energy. It is not only a question of how much better you look and feel or what your friends say and think—the scales and tape measure will tell their own story. Vitamon positively will put on firm flesh and increase energy when taken with every meal, but should not be used by anyone who OBJECTS to having their weight increased to normal. Results are absolutely guaranteed or money refunded. Your own druggist has Vitamon in stock or can quickly procure it for you. Be sure to remember the name—VI-TA-MON—there is nothing else like it.—Adv.

HAS VAST RESOURCES.

An illuminating contribution to the discussion concerning Germany's ability to pay the bill for damages assessed by the allies is made in an influential eastern newspaper by Frederic W. Wile, who resided for many years in Berlin as a professional observer and reporter. He says American bankers and government departments have in their possession copies of a tabulation of Germany's financial resources issued in 1913 by the great Deradner bank, a member of "the most powerful money trust in Europe." Its purpose was to demonstrate that Germany was the richest country in the world, with the exception of the United States.

This publication estimated Germany's national wealth at $270,000,000,000, Great Britain's at $10,000,000,000 less and France's at $170,000,000,000. Germany's coal production was put at 222,000,000 tons, as compared with 28,000,000 for France. Her production of pig iron and steel was shown to exceed the combined output of Great Britain and France. Only nine per cent. of German soil was not under profitable cultivation. The German crop returns per acre were shown to exceed those of any other country in the world for wheat, rye, barley, oats and potatoes. With the exception of sheep German animal-breeding—horses, cows and pigs—exceeded that of her two chief rivals combined. The value of the Prussian national railways was put at 11,000,000,000 marks, exceeding by a billion and a half the entire Prussian national debt.

Germany was not invaded during the war. Her factories were not destroyed, nor were her farm lands laid waste. She has lost her shipping, the iron ore of Lorraine and some potash and coal mines but she has vast resources of wealth that are untapped.

CHECKING UP FOREIGN TRADE.

The department of commerce is making a review of the foreign trade statistics of last year as a result of complaints alleging that the figures published under official sanction did not accurately reflect the situation.

For some months there has been a suspicion in the minds of students of trade that the statistics published by the department of commerce were not reliable, and that the import values were being pared down with a view to discouraging tariff protection, while the exports were being padded with a view of reflecting credit on the Democratic administration.

Something of the same nature was done in the last year or so of the Cleveland administration, and the Cleveland appointees were exposed some time after they had relinquished office. If the pending check-up discloses that the official figures have been tampered with some one should come in for a good wigging, if no more punitive measure can be applied.

Publication of statistics which misrepresent is a fraud on the people who are taxed for the upkeep of a department which is pledged to present the truth and which, if it publishes falsehoods is violating its trust.

It is vital to the enactment of proper tariff legislation that congress be correctly informed as to just what is transpiring in our foreign trade and the fact that the legislative branch is in the control of one party, while the administrative branch is in control of another is no excuse for falsehood or equivocation.

Father Wouldn't Wear 'Em

DO NOT FANCY MEDICINAL BEER.

Druggists throughout the country are giving expression to a refusal to become dispensers of the product of the breweries, even if the Palmer ruling does grant permission for the issuance of prescriptions for beer for "medicinal" purposes. The opportunity to become the successors of the outlawed saloon does not appeal to them. Druggists have trouble enough with dealers who make use of the reputation of the business to sell liquors or drugs illegally.

Only twenty-two per cent. of the druggists of the United States have permits to sell intoxicating liquors, which may be accepted as an indication that a great majority of druggists do not hold whisky in high repute for its medicinal value. Why should they place their endorsement on beer by dispensing it on prescription? The records of liquor sold upon the prescriptions of physicians lead to the conviction that much of it is sold in violation of the Volstead law, which requires that physicians should give the same consideration to issuing liquor prescriptions as they would to prescriptions for any other medicinal compound.

In prohibition states, before the advent of national prohibition, many mushroom drug stores were started for the purpose of selling whisky, and pharmacists were employed only as a blind. This had the effect of bringing discredit on the legitimate drug business. Druggists in large numbers will hardly care to assume the risk that will go with giving recognition to the dispensing of beer as "medicine."

If Postmaster Hays discovers a gum that will make stamps stick, it's a duty he owes to the envelope manufacturers to put them wise to it.

NOTHING LIKE THRIFT.

While many complaints are still heard about the high cost of living, one need only go to market to discover that there have been marked decreases in the cost of many commodities. And there is good reason to believe that many articles still held for high prices will soon yield to the general tendency to lower values. While there is still much unemployment, to the unemployed also the lower cost of living means a great deal, for if credit is necessary less credit is required.

The lower cost of living should mean to a large number of persons an increased opportunity to save money. This money, placed in a bank, will not only mean much to the possessor, but it is sent out into business and other channels to perform useful work. It will pay the obligation which the individual owes to the community in helping to finance it.

Reports of savings banks and other financial institutions show that large numbers of persons have the saving habit but it is true that many others continue in the practice of spending up to or beyond their incomes, if they are able to obtain credit. The folly of this practice is so self-evident that it is difficult to understand why any one should yield to it.

MAKES NO DIFFERENCE WITH CUPID.

While statistics would seem sometimes to show that Cupid keeps his eye on economic conditions counselling or permitting fewer marriages when the cost of living is high or employment low, again it appears as if he never gives such prosaic things as rent and the prices of food and clothing a thought. At any rate a dispatch from Washington says that data in the hands of the census bureau indicate that June will break all records this year in the United States for marriages and that 1921 throughout in this country is expected to be a banner year in this respect. The total of American marriages for the year is estimated at 1,000,000.

All of which shows that Cupid has none of that timidity that is blamed for the business depression. He does not sit down and figure that while prices may be falling, so also is the amount of employment. As a matter of fact if a lot of business men had the nerve and faith of Cupid record-breaking prosperity might be here [illegible]

LIFE'S VAUDEVILLE.

(By James Hall Naylor)

PEACE.

Man wasn't made for peace
Man was made for warfare

We dream dreams of peace; we aspire to peace, we hope for peace; we look for peace, we long for peace, but we never know peace in this life.

We talk of a heaven of peace.

But there may be no peace in the next life, even.

War, especially in the material sense, is a terrible thing. It is destructive, wasteful, cruel, sorrowful. But it is necessary; it is a part of the law of life. We may wish that it were not so; but it is so. Things are not as we would have them, they are just as they are.

The great John Ruskin, after much observation and though, said:

"When I tell you that war is the foundation of all the arts, I mean, also, that it is the foundation of all the virtues and faculties of men. It is very strange to me to discover this; and very dreadful. But I saw it to be an undeniable fact. Peace and the vices of life only flourish together. We talk of peace and learning, of peace and civilization. But I found those were not the words which the muse of history coupled together; that on her lips the words were peace and selfishness. I found that all great nations learned their truth of word and strength of thought in war. Yet, note carefully, it is not all war of which this can be said. It is not the ravage of the barbarian wolf flock, but the creative or foundational war is that in which the natural restlessness and love of contest among men are disciplined into modes of beautiful play and power, into aggressive conquest of surrounding evil."

War we've always had; war we always will have. Let us hope that warfare among nations, peoples, tribes and human individuals may cease. But in that delectable day we won't know peace; we'll be as far from real peace as we are at this moment of the world's history. Warfare man will always know, at war he will always be, at war with adverse material things, at war with opposing natural laws; at war with hindering physical powers. He will always have to war with the elements; with wind and water—with fire and flood—with drouth and deluge; with the heat at the equator—with the cold at the poles, with diseases and distempers; with poverty and famine, with sloth and idleness; with waste and extravagance; with vice and sin and crime.

It's the law of life.

Peace!

There's peace in the puddle of water—
But there's strife in the depths of the sea;
There's peace for the slave—
And there's peace in the grave—
But no peace for the living and free!
There's peace in the slough of inaction,
There's peace in the polliwog's brain;
But there's tumult, there's strife,
And there's red-blooded life—
In the soul of the man who's sane!
There's peace in the cloister and prison—
There's peace 'neath the sheltering sod;
But there's work and there's war
And there's strife evermore—
In the great out-of-doors of God!

SIX ENUMERATORS FOR ANNUAL SCHOOL CENSUS

They Are Named by School Board Last Night.

CAMPAIGN AGAINST WASTE IN SCHOOLS

Time To Call a Halt Is Way Some Members of Board Feel About It.

Six enumerators for the Marion school census in 1921 were appointed at a regular meeting of the board of education in the High school building Monday night. The enumerators are Miss Anna B. Seitz, Mrs. Paul Mouser, Mrs. Floy H. Aronhalt, Mrs. Daisy M. Hornby, Mrs. P. M. McKeever and Vitalis Kling. [illegible]

It is the plan to have two enumerators in each of the two larger wards in the city and one in each of the other wards. For this reason the number of enumerators this year was increased from five to six. Two will be assigned to the Third ward, two to the Second ward, and one each in the other two wards. The law provides that the census be taken during the two weeks ending with the fourth Saturday in May and the compensation shall be three cents for each enumerated person from six to twenty-one. The books will be sent to the county auditor and distributed by him. Assignments of the enumerators have not yet been made.

Campaign Against Waste.

Water waste, light and power bills, the condition of the basements in the Vernon Heights and Oakland Heights buildings and the matter of furnishing the Vernon Heights building furnished topics for considerable discussion by the board members.

A letter from the water company requesting the board to take steps to prevent waste of water in the school buildings was accompanied by a comparative statement showing the amount of water used in the schools during the past several years. The statement showed an increase, but it was stated this can be accounted for in large measure by the fact that the attendance in the schools has increased considerably in the period shown by the statement. Board members stated, however, that every means should be taken to prevent waste of water and instructed the superintendent of janitors to caution the janitors of the various buildings to do everything possible to prevent waste.

Clerk E. T. Smart called attention to light and power bills for several buildings, which he stated were excessive for this time of year. It was the sense of the board that notices be posted in each building showing the amount of electric current used and that a campaign of economy be inaugurated.

Will Make Inspection.

E. E. Beckett, contractor for the Vernon Heights building, called attention to the damp condition of the basement in this building and stated something should be done or the board would experience considerable difficulty with the floor there. In the discussion it was brought out that a similiar condition obtains in the basement of the Oakland Heights building. It was decided that the board members visit the buildings, make an investigation and determine what should be done.

Mr. Beckett also brought up the matter of the selection of hardware for the Vernon Heights building and it was decided that he prepare a list of the hardware needed and hardware men be invited to submit samples and prices at an early meeting of the board. A discussion of the matter of furnishing the Vernon Heights building resulted in no action. It was decided to take the question up immediately after the contracts for the buildings on north Main street and remodeling the Central Junior High school building are awarded.

Matter of $300.

Board members are also to determine, at the next inspection of the Vernon Heights building, whether to accept Mr. Beckett's proposal to build a belt line of stone under the eaves of the building instead of galvanized iron. There is due the board $300 for brick purchased for the construction of the building and Mr. Beckett has offered to build a belt line of stone for that amount and cancel the obligation.

E. E. Hodges, tree surgeon, presented a proposal to trim and care for the trees on the school grounds. The superintendent of janitors was instructed to investigate the condition of the trees and report.

Dr. H. R. McVay called attention to the first meeting of the Ohio State Educational conference in Columbus April 7 and 8 and suggested it might be of value to authorize Principal K. H. Marshall, of the High school, and Principal W. C. Selanders, of the departmental school, and possibly some other school officials to attend the sessions dealing with instruction in the conduct of educational tests so as to be able to conduct such tests here in case any are at any time considered desirable.

Special Classification.

Dr. McVay stated there are to be special demonstrations on the classification of Junior High school pupils according to mental tests and mental tests for classifying kindergarten and first grade pupils. Without taking formal action, the board decided to permit the school officials to attend if they desire to.

The monthly report showed an enrollment of 5,251; cases of tardiness 364; number neither absent nor tardy, 6,208; days lost by teachers, thirty-nine; number of times teachers were tardy, forty-one; visits to parents, 363, and visits from superintendent, twenty-seven. Properly approved claims were ordered paid and requisitions allowed.

The board adjourned to meet at 12 o'clock noon Tuesday, April 12, to receive bids for the construction of the building on north Main street.

GAINS WEIGHT AND STRENGTH IN FEW WEEKS

Former Chef at Bookwalter Cafeteria, Springfield, Highly Enthusiastic.

Mr. William J. Tenney, who lives at 1587 East Main street, Springfield, formerly chef at the Bookwalter cafeteria, says: "I was all run down, extremely nervous, and a shadow of my former self. I had no appetite at all, although I could. If I desired, have had the very best of food that the market affords. As a matter of fact the sight and smell of food seemed to pall on my nerves and nauseated me. My work kept me on the go most of the night and when it was time to rest I seldom got any sleep. I lost weight and strength and altogether felt anything but well—literally weary and worn-out. I started taking Redex about three weeks ago, and it has helped me wonderfully; it has given me new life and strength. I am no longer nervous and enjoy taking the walk to and from business. I am increasing in weight and my appetite is fine and my digestion is perfect. My wife, who has been ill for some time and had to undergo a surgical operation, also took Redex to strengthen her to withstand the shock. She has been operated on and is now getting along very favorably.

"Redex is a splendid medicine to any one in a run-down and weakened condition and I cheerfully recommend it."

Redex can be obtained in Marion at Lonser's, Schmidt's and all first-class drug stores.—Adv.

WHEE! FARMERS WON'T MOVE BACK FENCES

Will Ignore County Surveyor W. E. Weston's Notice.

PROMPTED BY STATE HIGHWAY DEPARTMENT

Former Prosecuting Attorney John H. Clark Addresses a Meeting of Farmers.

Owners of land along the Marion county portion of the Marion-Delaware road have formally decided not to comply with notices, sent out by County Surveyor W. E. Weston, at the instance of the state highway department, that they move their fences back a sufficient distance to increase the width of the roadway to sixty feet.

Approximately forty of the land owners held a meeting Monday night in the offices of the Marion County Farm bureau and held a long discussion of the proposition. Neither the state highway department nor the county surveyor's office was represented at the meeting. H. T. Myers, of Waldo, was chosen chairman of the meeting and Samuel Almendinger, of Waldo, acted as secretary.

Legal Advice.

John H. Clark reported on the legal phases of the proposal and answered a cross-fire of questions from the land owners. Mr. Clark told them the road was originally laid out as a sixty-foot roadway, but it had been reduced to forty feet by the county commissioners soon after 1900.

Mr. Clark stated that there is still a statute in force giving the county commissioners authority to reduce the width of county roads and that the statute has never been changed, neither has it ever been held unconstitutional by the supreme court.

Land owners contend that the roadbed as now constituted is about as wide as any improved roads and could be extended to a width of twenty feet without making it necessary to interfere with the fences.

What They Contend

It is also contended that although the action of the county commissioners provides for a forty foot road, most of the highway is now more than forty feet wide and a large portion of it fifty feet.

A formal motion that no action be taken at the present time was adopted by the land owners. This will result in the owners of land completely ignoring the order and leaving their fences where they now stand unless some legal procedure is instituted by the highway department.

WRESTLING.

Caddock Wins.

Columbus, April 5.—Before an audience of 4,000, Earl Caddock, Iowa, light-heavyweight champion wrestler, retained his title by flooring George Kotsonaros, local Greek wrestler, at the end of a struggle lasting two hours and twenty-four minutes. Kotsonaros was placed on the flat of his back by means of a head-scissors and arm lock. Kotsonaros is said to be the first opponent who wrestled more than two hours with Caddock. Up to the time of the delay call, Kotsonaros appeared to have an even chance to win. Caddock weighed 187 pounds and Kotsonaros, a half pound less. Paul Bowser, Newark, and John Richards, Virginia, were evenly matched in a three-minute rough-and-tumble bout. Both men weighed 174 pounds.

Is Still Champion.

New York, April 5.—Ed. Lewis is still heavyweight wrestling champion of the world, today. John Pesek, burly Nebraska grappler, failed in his effort to lift the title. He succumbed to Lewis after an hour, forty-four minutes and thirty-two seconds of fighting, being pinned to the mat with a bar-and-hammer hold. The headlock was barred.

Last Night's Fights

At New York—Roy Moore, St. Paul, outpointed Frankie Fay in fifteen rounds.

At St. Paul — Rocky Kansas knocked out Bobby Ward in the first round.

At Hazleton—Eddie Fletcher, New York, defeated Young Fulton in ten rounds.

At Holyoke, Massachusetts — James Dwyer, of Ireland, knocked out Al Gerard, Boston, in the sixth round.

Coming Meeting.

New York, April 5.—Louis Bogash, Bridgeport, welterweight aspirant to Jack Britton's crown, will meet Jimmy O'Gatty, a rival of long standing, in a fifteen-round feature bout, tonight, at the Pioneer Sporting club. Champion Britton will be at the ringside to watch his rivals in action. He has promised to meet the winner.

BASEBALL

As a Manager.

New York, April 5.—Ty Cobb will make his bow as a major league manager, next week. Will he be a success or a failure? Will he be able to lead the Detroit Tigers out of the jungle of defeat? Will he make them a real power in the American league once again? Baseball fans throughout the country are interested in these questions. They will watch Cobb and his Bengals with genuine interest for the career of the Georgia peach, already one of the most colorful in baseball history will be doubly brilliant if he succeeds as a manager. Cobb is temperamental. He will be a temperamental manager. More than likely they will soon be calling him the "McGraw of the American league." But temperament does not usually travel with failure—not so you could notice it—and if Cobb gets the Tigers off on the right "claw," they may surprise everybody, even themselves, by finishing in the first division.

BASKETBALL

Business College Gets Title.

Eighteen to two in favor of the Marion Business college basket-ball five was the score made in the game played against the Silk Mill five Monday evening on the armory floor. The Business college five was awarded the championship in a tournament played by teams from St. Mary's school, Pleasant township school, Newman's Cigar factory and the Silk Mills. The Business college five won seven games of the tournament which closed with last night's game.

Women of Middle Age

THE critical stage of a woman's life usually comes between the years of 45 and 55, and is often beset with annoying symptoms such as nervousness irritability, melancholia, heat flashes which produce headache and dizziness, and a sense of suffocation. Guard your health carefully, for if this period be passed over safely, many years of perfect health may be enjoyed.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is especially adapted to help women through this crisis. It exercises a restorative influence, tones and strengthens the system, and assists nature in the long weeks and months covering this period. It is prepared from medicinal roots and herbs, and contains no harmful drugs or narcotics. Its value is proven by many such letters as these:

Afton, Tenn.—"I want other suffering women to know what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. During Change of Life I was in bed for 18 months and had good care, but did not improve. A friend advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which I did, and in a short time I felt better. That was five years ago, and now when I feel run down and nervous I take the Compound and it always does me good. I wish all women would try it during Change of Life, for I know it will do them good."—Mrs. A. Keller, Afton, Tenn.

Thomas, Okla.—"I first used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in my girlhood days, by the advice of a friend. At the age of 47 I was troubled with dizziness, hot flashes, and became very weak so that I was unable to do any work. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound with the result that I felt better and stronger than I have for years. I have also given it to my three daughters, and always with good results. The Vegetable Compound is certainly grand for the ills of women."—Mrs. J. G. Swaney, Route B, Thomas, Okla.

Holding A Husband

BY ADELE GARRISON.

Robert Savarin! The unexpected sound of the artist's name from Marion's childish lips startled me so much that for a second I forgot my invariable rule never to question a child or an employe concerning any matter not my own affair. I asked quickly, sharply:

"What do you mean, Marion, by your mother worrying about Uncle Robert?"

I would have given a great deal to recall the question. I regret to say that I like would never learn the I had asked it. But I knew that behind the child's apparently meaningless words were already rumbling from her lips would only have confused her, made her uneasy and seriously suspicious of me, especially as what I could not know. So I remained in silence to the little girl's naive utterance.

"Why, I mean she worries about his being away up there in the mountains, and I know she thinks it's her fault, 'cause I've heard her talking to his picture when she thought I was asleep. 'Ah, Robert,' she says sometimes, with her voice all trembly like, 'have I condemned you—'

I found my voice to stop her reminiscences, even as she herself followed, her cheeks burning hotly, her eyes holding a shamed look.

"You mustn't—" I began, but her impetuous words drowned mine.

"Oh, Auntie Madge, I forgot!" she said distressedly. "That is something mother doesn't know I know. I ought not to tell it even to you."

"You haven't really told me anything, yet, dear," I said reassuringly, "and we'll forget all about it. I shouldn't have asked you the question. But I agree with you in wishing Uncle Robert were here. Perhaps he may come down soon."

"I'm afraid not." Her voice was doleful. "I ask about his coming a lot for I love him so, you know."

She paused and I nodded assent, for, indeed, I did know the intense affection which the imaginative child lavished upon the brilliant artist, whose love for her mother, as much as the remembrance of his lost years, kept him a recluse in the Catskill mountains when laurels and artistic triumphs were his for the taking in the world's metropolis.

"But mother always says he's so busy that I mustn't expect to see him hardly ever until I'm a big, big girl. But, oh, Auntie Madge, I want him so now! All the other girls I know have fathers, except me. You know I had one, and he's dead, but do you know—" her voice sank to an awed whisper—"I don't think he ever liked me very much. He never played with me or took me places the way Elizabeth Gray's father does, and he didn't come to see my grandmother and me very much. She used to cry about it, poor Granzie."

I had no compunctions in listening to this phase of the excited child's outpourings, for it was a familiar story to me, one which I had shared with Lillian in the days when Tom Morton, the man who had dragged her through purgatory, was keeping her child from her. And my heart ached for Marion, and for the lonely man who waited only the word to lavish on her all the starved fatherhood of a royal heart. It ached most of all for Lillian, denying herself the love of her girlhood and of her middle age, putting away from her the adoration, the protecting tenderness which Robert Savarin only waited her word to give her, because she feared the publicity for Marion of the divorce from Harry Underwood which must precede any marriage of hers.

Marion crept back into my arms, lifting her flower-like face to mine.

"Do you suppose, Auntie Madge," she whispered, "that it would be all right for me to write to Uncle Robert, all by myself, and tell him that mother needs him, that you're afraid she's going to be ill? He made me promise once that if I ever found out she needed him I would let him know."

I struggled for a minute with the temptation to give an unqualified assent to the child's entreaty. But I knew that I dared not do it unless it was a question of life and death with Lillian. She was not a woman in whose affairs one can meddle with impunity.

"I am afraid not, sweetheart," I said reluctantly. "Mother knows best, you know. But I'll keep watch over her for you, and when I think it is right to do it, I will tell you. Come, get on your frock, now."

Her eyes, large and lustrous, looked steadily at me for a moment with the gravity and keenness of an adult, then she turned toward the bed where her frock lay.

"But I do wish mother would marry Uncle Robert, so I could have a really truly father like other girls," she said with a rebellious sigh.

And I echoed her wish in my heart.

Be Strong!

Men Are Stronger Than Their Nerves—Bitters and Aromatics Strengthen the Nerves

Strong nerves mean a strong man or a strong woman and those who have weak nerves cannot possibly win in the struggle for success today. Success these days depends on health, strength and nerves of steel. Dr. Siegert's Angostura Bitters is highly recommended as a nerve tonic of great value. Dr. C. Wis, formerly Vice-President of the American Medical Association, testified under oath that he had used it in his practice—for nervous diseases and hysteria and as a tonic. It restores health and strength.

Our absolute guarantee is behind every bottle of Dr. Siegert's Angostura Bitters. If it does not do what we claim for it, your druggist will return your money. Don't wait. Start taking this great tonic and invigorator today. Dose—half a tablespoonful in an equal amount or more of water, taken before meals and before retiring. Your druggist has it.

An Easy Way For Thin People to Put on Flesh and Gain Weight

Strong, Straightforward Advice to Thin, Undeveloped Men and Women

If you are thin, scrawny and undeveloped, if your face is peaked and your cheeks and neck exhibit unsightly hollows, it's almost certain that your nervous system is at the bottom of the trouble. You can eat three, yes four, substantial, fat producing meals a day but as long as your stomach has an insufficient supply of nerve force this food you eat will pass out of the body with little if any benefit.

In order to assimilate properly the nourishing food you eat and convert it into healthy tissue and fat the nerves that control the process of digestion and assimilation must be put in first-class shape and until that is done you might just as well quit trying to put on flesh. Your system is starving for something that will turn the food you eat into healthy stay-there flesh and it can only be done in one way — by correcting faulty nervous digestion.

Thin, nervous, run-down people, however, with impoverished blood and half starved looks are hailing with delight a quick and certain maker of solid flesh called EVANS' TRIPLE PHOSPHATES that is unequalled for repairing faulty digestion and correcting nervous digestive troubles. In fact the makers of Evans' Triple Phosphates guarantee that one month's treatment will increase your weight by several pounds and within ten days make you feel like a new being, full of ambition, vigor and a desire to accomplish things. Bartlett's Drug Store and leading druggists everywhere have agreed to supply Evans' Triple Phosphates and guarantee it to do just what is claimed for it or money refunded.

Caution: While Evans' Triple Phosphates accomplishes wonders in nervous digestive troubles and as a general nerve tonic, it should not be taken by anyone who objects to a few additional pounds of solid stay-there flesh.—Adv.

PIMPLY? WELL, DON'T BE

People Notice It. Drive Them Off with Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets

A pimply face will not embarrass you much longer if you get a package of Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets. The skin should begin to clear after you have taken the tablets a few nights.

Cleanse the blood, bowels and liver with Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets, the successful substitute for calomel: there's no sickness or pain after taking them.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets do that which calomel does, and just as effectively, but their action is gentle and safe instead of severe and irritating.

No one who takes Olive Tablets is ever cursed with a "dark brown taste," a bad breath, a dull, listless, "no good" feeling, constipation, torpid liver, bad disposition or pimply face.

Olive Tablets are a purely vegetable compound mixed with olive oil; you will know them by their olive color.

Dr. Edwards spent years among patients afflicted with liver and bowel complaints, and Olive Tablets are the immensely effective result. Take one or two nightly for a week. See how much better you feel and look. 15c and 30c.

the old sort—and the new

Corns used to be treated by fakers.

But science has found a better way to treat corns. And millions have adopted it.

The modern way is Blue-jay—liquid or plaster. A famous chemist perfected it. This great surgical dressing house prepares it.

Blue-jay is applied by a touch. The corn pain ends instantly. Then the corn is gently loosened. In a little while it comes out.

It is folly to pare corns or to treat them in unscientific ways. This new way is ending some 20 million corns a year. It will end yours any time you let it.

Prove this tonight.

GARIS' BEDTIME STORIES

UNCLE WIGGILY'S WATER WHEEL.

[BY HOWARD R. GARIS.]
[Copyright 1921, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.]

"Rat-a-tat-tat!" came a knock at the door of the hollow stump bungalow where Uncle Wiggily lived.

"Goodness! Who can that be in all the rain?" asked Nurse Jane Fuzzy Wuzzy, from where she was sewing in a rocking chair. It surely was raining in Woodland, near the Orange Ice Mountain.

"Well, I don't believe it is the Pussiewah or Skeezicks," remarked Uncle Wiggily, as he laid aside the cabbage leaf newspaper he had been reading, and went to the door. "They would hardly come out in this storm."

"So much the better," Nurse Jane said. And when the bunny gentleman opened the door there stood Johnnie and Billie Bushytail, the squirrel boys, in coats made from leaves of the rubber plant, which kept them quite dry.

"Oh, Uncle Wiggily!" chattered Johnnie. "Will you come out and play with us?"

"We haven't any school," went on Billie. "There's a leak in the roof and the lady mouse teacher sent us all home. We want to have some fun."

"The idea, boys!" exclaimed Nurse Jane. "Uncle Wiggily can't come out and play with you in the rain! His rheumatism will hurt!"

"I guess it wouldn't if I put on my rubber plant raincoat," said the old rabbit gentleman. "I'll come out with you squirrel chaps. I was just wondering what I could do for an adventure."

"Oh, such a rabbit! Such a rabbit!" sighed Nurse Jane, holding up her paws. "What can you do in the rain, I'd like to know?"

"I'll make the boys a water wheel," said Uncle Wiggily. "The brook that runs into the duck pond ocean is high now on account of the rain. Down by Grandpa Goosey's pen the water falls over the rocks. I'll make a water wheel and set it there. The squirrel boys can help me make the water wheel. It will do them good."

"What in the world good a toy water wheel will be I can't see!" said Nurse Jane, sniffy like and incredulous.

"Maybe it will be some good," spoke Billie, hopefully.

So Uncle Wiggily put on his rubber plant coat and went out with the squirrel boys, taking some old wooden shingles with him.

It was raining hard, and the water in the brook was foaming along until it reached the place of the rocks. There it fell over, making a waterfall, and, as you know, a waterfall will turn a mill wheel or a water wheel.

Uncle Wiggily sat down under a tree, where it didn't rain quite so hard and with Nurse Jane's old potato knife he started to make a water wheel for the squirrel boys. The bunny cut four broad paddles from wooden shingles, and fitted them together. Then he fastened this wheel in a sort of frame and stuck it in among the rocks, so the wheel came under the falling cascade of water.

And as the water hit the paddles of the wheel it turned it around and around as fast as anything, like the merry-go-round you know, only the water wheel whizzed around up and down like the hands of the clock when they race with each other.

"Oh, how good that is!" quacked Grandpa Goosey

"Now there's your water wheel, boys," said Uncle Wiggily as he set it in place. "You can play with it while I go to see Grandpa Goosey."

And you can imagine how sad Uncle Wiggily was when he found the old gentleman goose in bed with a fever.

"Oh, I'm so hot and warm" quacked Grandpa Goosey. "I wish I could feel a nice, cool breeze!"

"Haven't you an electric fan?" asked Uncle Wiggily.

"Yes, I have," answered Grandpa Goosey, "but it is broken. I guess all the electricity has run out. The fan is there, but it won't go around."

"Hum! Let me see it," said the bunny gentleman. And when he had looked at it he gave a jump and said: "The squirrel boys' water wheel! The very thing! I'll do it!"

"What's that?" asked Grandpa Goosey.

But Uncle Wiggily hopped out without speaking. The bunny gentleman took with him a long string, which reached from Grandpa Goosey's pen house to the place where the squirrel boys' water wheel was splashing around.

"This water wheel might as well be useful as playful," said Uncle Wiggily. "I'll fasten this string around it and then I'll put the string around Grandpa Goosey's broken electric fan. When the wheel turns it will turn the fan, for the string will be like a belt on the sewing machine."

No sooner said than done. In a little while the string belt was in place from water wheel to fan, and then, as the wheel splashed, it turned the fan, making a cool breeze for Grandpa Goosey's hot fever.

"Oh, how good that is!" quacked Grandpa Goosey as he went to sleep, and Johnnie and Billie were glad their water wheel was of such good use.

JUBILEE'S PARDNER

by Judd Mortimer Lewis

Illustrations by Edwins

I bet Jubilee is glad now that it is going to be summer again. I know I am, for a fella can fly kites and go fishing and play marbles and swim in the summer time, and I want to go out to the back of the poor house and throw water up on the blue clay bank and make some more slippery slicks and slide down them into the river. I bet nobody would of found out about the slippery slicks if I had not started it.

When we was eating breakfast my mother asted my grandfather what he thought he was doing throwing his sinker out in the yard like he done yesterday. She said there was not any fish in our yard, and, he said there might be some time, and she said he must be expecting high water. He said it didn't need high water. He said this time of year there is heavy fogs and fish sometimes come out of the lake and swim around in the fog and we could catch a mess right out of our dining room window. I do not believe that.

Then he said that he is going to try fishing for bass, and then a fella has to wade out in the river and throw his bait as far as he can. And then my mother said that when his legs got all twisted with roomatism he promised her he wouldn't, and then my father buted in and said that my grandfather knows where to get a better kind of medicine than liniment for roomatism and he would like to have some roomatism himself if he could get that kind of medicine.

I would not want him to get anything that would hurt but I bet he would look funny if both of his legs was all twisted.

We all went around to call for the Lost Bag of Tripe because he had not showed up, and he was setting out on the front step holding his baby brother that we wanted to take out and make tuff when it was first born, but his mother wouldn't let us. It took hold of my finger and grinned at me. It has got a lot of sense for such a little kid, but it has not not got any teeth or hair. I bet if we could get it now and make it eat raw meat and give it a lot of exercise we could make a champeen strong man and prize fighter out of it by the time it growed up.

My grandfather had went fishing to the lake so I took his fancy pole and marked a ring in the dirt and was going to try throwing the sinker but it went back of me and slammed the window and cracked it, and my aunt hollered and my mother come running out and grabbed the fish pole and slapped me on the side of the noodle. That is the kind of a mother I have got. Me and Jubilee went out and sat and [illegible] manger till it was time for me to milk the cows with our arms around each other. My mother is going to be sorry some of these days. I had a lot of fish to clean. I do not see what good fish are, a fella might as well eat worms in the first place as to eat fish meat which is made out of them. I went to bed early. It was raining.

Take no chances. At the first sign of sniffing and sneezing get a box of Lightning Laxative Quinine Tablets and stop the cold within 24 hours. Lightning Laxative Quinine Tablets are safe, pleasant; never gripe or sicken. Prevent pneumonia then. Only 25c per box.

This will often bring quick relief from the distressing head noises. Clogged nostrils should open, breathing become easy and the mucus stop dropping into the throat. It is easy to prepare, costs little and is pleasant to take. Anyone who is threatened with Catarrhal Deafness or who has head noises should give this prescription a trial.—Adv.

SAGE TEA DARKENS HAIR TO ANY SHADE

Don't Stay Gray! Here's an Old-time Recipe that Anybody Can Apply.

The use of Sage and Sulphur for restoring faded, gray hair to its natural color dates back to grandmother's time. She used to keep her hair beautifully dark, glossy and attractive. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect.

But brewing at home is musty and out-of-date. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get this famous old preparation, improved by the addition of other ingredients, which can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning, the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, it becomes beautifully dark and glossy.—Adv.

Sometimes a Hostess Unwittingly Plays the Little Blind Archer's Game and Her Efforts Spell "Home" for a Man and Woman Who Had Been Wondering if Matrimony Was Advisable

IT WAS a wild night. A furious autumn wind was noisily engaged in gathering great bucketfuls of rain and hurling them spitefully against the windows of the Claxton living room. It certainly did look as if Old Boreas had a special grudge against the warmth and color behind the glass and was trying with all his might and main to get inside and drown it out. But the old blowhard was only wasting his breath, if he but knew it, for the shining diamond-shaped panes that had been one of the chief reasons why Edith Claxton had felt that she just must have that little house, the chintz curtains with their gay clumps of hollyhocks and foxgloves and the row of geraniums in their red pots along the wide sill had all banded together into a sort of an alliance to thwart him, and the occupants of the room were utterly oblivious to such uninteresting things as weather.

As the chubby mahogany clock on the mantel chimed six Edith Claxton slid out of the big chintz-covered fireside chair with a yawn, laid her cook book face down on the table and pulled down her rumpled smock.

"Your mother sure is a lazy old thing tonight, isn't she, Muggans?" she demanded of her year-old son as she reached into the pen where he lay stranded on his back and picked him up for the 'steenth time that afternoon.

"I don't want to hurt your feelings, Muggans, old boy," she chuckled, "but do you know that you are built exactly on the lines of a June bug?" and kissing the wrinkles on the back of his fat little neck she proceeded to prop him up against the side of his pen like a baby doll in a shop window. She stood watching him trying to balance himself for a few seconds before toppling back onto the thick play rug, then, laughing softly to herself, she hurried away in the direction of the kitchen.

Immediately the rattling of pots and pans heralded the approach of the usual six fifteen odor, and James M. Claxton, Jr., re-christened Muggans by his fond parents, stopped struggling to right himself, stretched out his arms and legs on his rug and lay quite still for the first time that afternoon, licking his little chops. It wasn't that he really counted on getting any of that something that was responsible for the delicious smell his mother released every night at almost the same time, but it foretold that in a very few minutes he would get a bottle filled with a sweet, warm fluid that would just go to the right spot, and when it was finished a big strong, curly-haired man would arrive with a wonderful assortment of games that were always such a relief after a cuddly day of woman stuff.

And tonight was no exception, for no sooner had the last spoonful of his bottle gurgled down his throat when the key clicked in the door, and Jimsy Claxton, Sr., owner of the jolly little house, lord and master of the jolly little woman and dad and pal of the jolly little baby entered his kingdom.

"Yum, yum, but that smells good, whatever it is," he called out as he hung his dripping coat up in the closet and went on out into the kitchen to deposit his umbrella in the sink. He paused on the way to rub his wet cheek against Edith's flushed one as she stirred the contents of a pot on the stove.

"Oo-oh, but you are cold!" she squealed. "Be sure you get nice and warm before you touch Muggans. He has been so good and healthy today that I am holding my tongue in my cheek," and she pushed him into the living room to the hearth rug, where he stood with his hands stretched out to the blaze.

"All right, missus. I hasten to obey, but you bring me down his night things and I'll have him ready for bed in a jiffy. Then you hustle on that nectar and ambrosia that I just got a whiff of before I turn cannibal and devour this fat, juicy son of yours."

Young Muggans shrieked with glee and tried to climb up the bars of his cage, for all the world like a monkey in the zoo, as his father sprang for him, mouth wide open, uttering weird and fearful noises.

"Jimsy, Jimsy, dear, you mustn't get him excited like that if you want him to go to sleep in a hurry," called Edith from the stairs. "Here are his sleeping drawers. I will hang them here to get warm. And let me tell you, young man," she paused at the dining room door and turned back, "you are going to get a very ordinary dinner tonight. Hungarian goulash, the book calls it, and upside-down apple pie."

"My dear girl, you could cook the left ear of an armadillo and serve it to the queen's taste, so I should worry. Here you young rascal, let go of my hair." They were in the dining room now, Edith putting on the doilies and Jimsy riding his son pickaback around the table at top speed.

"I guess you have forgotten that Sue Newton and that man of hers are coming to dinner tomorrow night!" she shouted above the racket.

"Ha! ha! so that is why the silver is gleaming at us so brilliantly this evening, and the floors are so shiny, and you are apologizing for the goulash. Saving the flatiron for the faint-hearted lovers, are we?"

"Now, Jimsy, dear, stop joking. You know how much I think of Sue, and—"

"I like her, too, Ede, a whole lot. And John is a fine fellow, too. But I can't say he has much pep as a lover. Or else he'd make her marry him."

"She doesn't think they are able to marry yet."

"That is why I am all out of patience with them. What does she want? John to set her up housekeeping next door to Mr. Rockefeller."

"I think myself it is too bad for them to wait. That is one reason why I planned this party tomorrow night. Everything is going to be so nice, and when they see how well we are getting on—"

"Ah, turning matchmakers, are we?"

Edith paused in her preparations to explain, and Jimsy, tucking his son and heir under one arm, opened the drawer of the buffet and began to lay the silver at the two places.

"I am going to have the most scrumptious dinner to start out with, chicken like Mammy Lize taught me, with rice and cream gravy, candied yams, fruit salad with hot cheese biscuit, fudge cake—" She was obliged to swallow the rest of her menu, for her husband's hand was pressed tightly against her lips.

"Have a heart, woman, I haven't had anything since breakfast but an apple. A red to the hand, I say. It's not romantic, it's hy-by for me. We are distracting your mother from the business in hand," and for a few minutes a happy romp ensued in the little house. Edith, but recently engaged in combing the goulash, called to herself as the middle echoes from the battle royal that was going on before the open fire in the living room.

Ting-a-ling! The door bell rang out suddenly, and right on top of it came a soft peal of laughter drowned out by a deep bass one, then three short quick knocks in rapid succession.

Edith ran in from the kitchen and clutched her husband's arm in terror.

"James Montgomery Claxton, what day is it?" she whispered hysterically.

James Montgomery Claxton was wrapping his partly clothed infant in a blanket.

"Friday. Whatever ails you, Ede? Here you hold this eel while I see who is at the door," but Edith still clutched him tightly, waving away the baby that he was trying to force into her arms.

"Jimsy, I have been twisted ever since Mary came to wash on Tuesday instead of Monday this week. There are John Cutting and Sue now, and there isn't a thing to eat in this house but stew, common garden stew, and upside-down apple pie."

"Don't you mind, Ede? Remember what I said about that armadillo's left ear. Let's just make the best of it. What's good enough for us Claxtons ought to be good enough for anybody," and he threw open the door.

"Greetings, folks. Come on in out of the wet," he called.

In the excitement of disposing of the wet coats and umbrellas, exorcising the weather and exclaiming over Muggans's newest tooth, Edith hoped her excitement passed unnoticed.

As she helped Sue out of her velvety velour coat and hung it up on the hook next to where Jimsy was hanging John's slubby old raincoat she wondered if the lovely soft thing, the well-cut blue tricolette, and the new hat with its band of burnt goose could possibly compensate for all that she and John were missing. She remembered her own little two-year-old hat that she had re-covered herself and the summer suit that had been ripped up and redyed and was now waiting to be made over into the only new dress that she was to have that winter, and she didn't envy Sue a bit. For just a second she forgot the mistake she had made with the calendar. Then she remembered.

She insisted on Jimsy's allowing John to help him in the interesting process of getting Muggans into his night clothes: "he is usually so selfish over it," she told them, and then she carried Sue off with her to the kitchen.

As she closed the door carefully behind them she faced her friend tragically. "Sue, dear," she faltered, "I am so sorry. But I thought today was yesterday and tomorrow turned out to be today, and just smell that stew. That's all there is in the house." Then her sense of humor, that never was very far away, returned and she laughed till the tears stood in her eyes.

"Why, I can't see what you are fussing about. It certainly smells good to me," comforted Sue. "I am sure John and I have eaten stew before. Shall I put on two more plates?" and without waiting for an answer she propped open the dining room door and in a few minutes the table was laid for four, a pan of Edith's flaky biscuits was browning in the oven and she was turning out a jar of Mother Claxton's famous spiced peaches into her best cut glass bowl.

Peals of laughter came from the living room. Edith opened the door a crack and peeped in, then beckoned to Sue. The dignified John was sitting flat on the floor in front of Jimsy with a pair of gray flannel sleeping drawers spread out pet fashion to catch two tiny, squirming pink legs, whose owner was striving to prevent them from being caught, and all three were laughing at the tops of their voices.

"I must rescue him," she whispered; "this is awfully bad for him," and she ran in and, seizing the baby, had him into his night togs in a twinkling. "You have played long enough, you three boys," she told them, as they all expostulated at the abrupt breaking up of their game. "You may all have one kiss from this young man, then he must go to bed," and after the young man had made the rounds she went back up-stairs, protesting over his father's shoulder.

The dinner turned out to be a most hilarious feast, but Edith felt that they all realized that she was very uncomfortable over her absurd mistake and were just trying to put her at her ease. Neither John nor Sue seemed just the chewers, she thought. Jimsy, her fast one, of course hadn't been able to keep the secret from John, and he insisted on helping himself to the choice bits of the fried chicken when they came back, as they did, for more gravy and as Edith listened to Jimsy's line of nonsense as he tried to entertain Sue she thought she had never loved him so much.

But, as usual, Sue was a good listener. The chicken was just right and there was room for one more helping and some left over for the cook, for those who wanted it. Jimsy made a great deal of ceremony over the last piece in a dish. As Edith, trying to enter into the mood, held the knife poised over it before cutting into it, a wail came down the stairs.

To the grown-ups, unaccustomed as they were to a baby's cries, the wail was not unusual; but a mother's ear can detect in an instant whether the sound means a pin, a pain or just peevishness. Edith gave Jimsy one despairing look and fled up the stairs. Excusing himself, Jimsy followed her.

"I just felt it in my bones that something even more dreadful would happen," she whispered as she leaned over Muggans's crib, where he was now screaming himself red in the face. "Callie. Run down and bring me up that tea kettle of water on the stove and see what they are doing. If they have finished their dessert, tell them to go into the living room and that we will be down in a little while," and she turned her attention to her baby's troubles.

"Shan't I call the doctor?" Jimsy was always frightened to death when Muggans wasn't himself.

"Goodness, no. He just has a little stomach ache. He will be all right when he gets a spoonful of hot water, I think."

In a very little while he was apparently better, but he refused to be put down in the crib again. Edith took him on her lap and sat down in the rocking chair by the bed.

"Run down and see what they are doing now, Jimsy," and she concentrated all her efforts on getting Muggans to sleep while he was gone.

"Well?" she said when he was back.

"Why, they are all right, Edith. I don't see any sense in your worrying this way. They are washing the dishes like an old married couple."

"Oh, my goodness, Jimsy Claxton! They aren't. Isn't that awful? Who is washing?"

"John. And you needn't look like that, Edith Claxton. I've washed dishes hundreds of times with you. I guess John can stand it once."

"Jimsy, you couldn't understand if I explained a hundred years. It is just all these messy things that is keeping John and Sue from marrying on his salary. Sue hates that side of it. And I suppose he does, too. I was going to hide all that and show them only the nice things. Oh, well, never mind. We have spoiled things, I guess. Let's make the best of it, as you say. Baby won't let us go downstairs and play. Now what shall we do?"

"Wrap him up and I'll take him down. He'll go to sleep soon."

The dishes were washed and put away and the kitchen was at least as it was when Ed came down. Although Jimsy insisted that the baby was asleep and they could sit around now and have a regular good old talkfest, the guests seemed to Edith to be at ease, and in a very little while they insisted that they must go.

After the door had closed behind them Edith sank down in her chair, buried her face in her arms and cried as hard as Muggans had cried earlier in the evening with his pain. Jimsy came down from putting Muggans in his crib and found her there.

"Edie, darling, you are just making yourself sick over nothing at all. I don't see why you feel this way. People don't expect things to move like clockwork all the time. They probably didn't think a thing about it. It isn't like you to make a mountain out of a molehill this way."

"It's no use your saying anything, Jimsy. I went and spoiled everything. Oh, why couldn't I have let well enough alone? They will go home thinking things are always like this, all topsyturvy, untidy house, horrid, stinky old dinners, sick babies, and they will wait all the longer to get rich. Perhaps it has disgusted them altogether with marriage and they will break off their engagement, if there is an engagement."

Then next morning the postman left this note at the little house for Mrs. James M. Claxton. It was postmarked, Edith noticed, after reading it, Thursday, 11:30 p. m. It said:

"Edith dear—I am going to run in tomorrow evening for a piece of that fudge cake Jim talked so much about, and yours and his congratulations. John and I realized at your nice party last night for the first time all that comfortable, homy, human happiness that we have been missing all these years while we have been looking for, oh, I don't know what. I could see that you were worried, and I am sending you this note to tell you what you have done for us.

"We decided before John left tonight that we would be married as soon as ever I could get ready. I am going to give up my job at once and go down home and take a course—very short and intensive it will be—in cooking, with mother. Then we are going to try and find a house near you. Won't that be heavenly?

"Kiss the back of Muggans's neck for me.

"Yours in love, S.

"P. S.—John says the very first thing I learn to make must be an upside-down apple pie."

FOOTPRINTS : By Harold De Polo

DAVID GREGORY sat at the huge mahogany desk in his spacious, handsomely furnished library, his chin resting in his hands, his brow furrowed, thinking of the one telling point necessary to round out the speech that he was to make the following night. He was the People's Choice candidate for mayor, and tomorrow was the day before election—the day when he must make his last address to the multitude that would come to hear him deliver it. It was, in brief, a summing up of his opponent, McGann—a tool ruled by the machine—and it was against this formidable array of rogues that Gregory was battling. Still, he could not quite get the final and essential point that would round out his otherwise perfect speech to a nicety. He wanted just one more big, striking fact that would shatter McGann and his party.

He heard a tinkle on the bell, frowning as he wondered who it could be that had come to disturb him.

The maid appeared in the doorway. "A lady, sir. She says that what she has to see you about is—is 'urgent and important,' them's her words!"

An amused smile went over the man's strong, firm, grave face—strong and rugged and honest, and topped with iron-gray hair. Probably some reporter after a heart-to-heart interview, he thought. "Oh, well, just show her in, Mary!" Then, as the maid turned to leave, "By the way, yesterday you mentioned some wedding you and the cook wished to attend. You may go, I shall not need you any more this evening!"

The maid thanked him and left. Presently she returned, holding the heavy portiere aside so that the lady whose business was so "urgent and important" might enter.

David Gregory rose to his feet, a look of surprise flitting across his face as he saw his caller. She was an extremely young and beautiful woman, gowned with a severe simplicity that was quite striking; black velvet suit, black hat with a single plume, black gloves—everything about her, in fact, plain black, and of fine texture. It all served to bring out the pale face, the big dark eyes, the finely arched brows, the carmine lips. Yes, Gregory told himself that she was a very beautiful woman—almost girl, one might say.

He bowed. "Won't you be seated, madam?"

The woman walked forward across the thick, costly rug of deep maroon, showing a set of even, pearly teeth as she smiled, and took a chair close to him. "Really, Mr. Gregory," she flashed up with a charming smile, "I presume that I'm horribly thoughtless to bother you at such an important time. I assure you, though, that I'm very sorry about it. But it's quite necessary, you see, for I have to leave for Chicago in the morning!"

She laughed softly a trifle little laugh, as was very pleasant to hear. "Why, I declare! You seem as if you haven't the slightest idea who I am, have you, or what I've come about. I—really, I must explain!"

"I am at a loss," said Mr. Gregory.

The woman fumbled in her bag, brought out a card and tendered it to him with another of her fascinating smiles.

He glanced at it:

MISS ETHEL CHURCH LANSOLPH
Vice President Women's Club for the Benefit of Aged Poor
Main Office, [illegible]

"I [illegible] SAW A [illegible]

The woman now ran to the farthest corner of the room. Deliberately she knocked a vase from the mantelpiece. Then she came to the center of the room and hastily flicked the cover from the table, sending the electric lamp on to the floor, smashed into thousands of pieces.

"Oh, help, help, help!" she shrieked. "Dear God, save me from this beast—save me! Oh, oh, oh!" She snatched her hat from her head, threw it on the floor and let down her hair. Immediately she ripped open her coat, sending the buttons flying. Then, screaming in a terror-stricken voice, she ran to the window, pulled up the shade and raised the glass. "Help, help!" she cried. "Help—murder—police!"

David Gregory sat quite still—thinking, thinking! He knew that the thing would not do him any good—that it would, if he could not prove the woman a fraud, well-nigh ruin his chances. He felt that if he made any bodily move at all it would only cause the woman to make more noise, and so he stayed in his chair, his wide, high forehead creased in lines. Suddenly a peculiar smile came to his lips.

Still the woman shrieked. Presently the door below was heard to give way with a snap, she rushed up the stairs, and in a moment two officers stood on the threshold of the door, their faces red and perspiring, their nightsticks in their hands.

The woman was leaning against a table. She was breathing hard and looked as if she had been through a violent struggle. "Oh, oh," she breathed faintly. "Thank God—thank—God!"

"What—what is it, ma'am?" asked one of the men.

She pointed to Gregory, sitting stolidly at his desk. "Oh, he—he—I came to ask for a subscription—here is my—my card—and he—he—oh, he tried to—to—" She hid her face and shuddered.

The officer and his companion fell back in amazement. "He—he—Mr. Gregory! Why—why—What—what—'s it mean, sir?"

But the woman did not give him time to reply. "Oh, and to think that he—he—is posing as an honest man and one who wishes to become mayor of this city! Oh, oh! But never fear, God will punish you—the law will punish you! Officer, I wish to have that brute arrested so that other poor, innocent women may never fall into his clutches. Oh, he—he—" And she shuddered and paused, hiding her face with her trembling hands.

The policeman's rough face softened; he looked at the People's Choice candidate for mayor with an angry expression. "How about this, Mr. Gregory?" he asked sharply.

Gregory glanced shrewdly at the woman a moment before he turned to the officer. "My dear man, I know nothing at all about it, except that it is some vile plot!"

The man shook his head sternly. He spoke curtly. "Sorry. Guess you'll have to come along to the station. The lady prefers the charge and there's nothing else to do!"

Gregory stroked his chin with a smile. He turned on the woman and eyed her searchingly. "Madam, do you still persist in your story. I honestly warn you that you are extremely foolish!"

"Oh, you—you brute!" she sobbed.

"Guess we'd better be gettin' along, sir," said the officer gruffly, his sympathy for the defenseless woman again coming to the front, while his companion scowled him with a gruff rumble, murmuring that the People's Choice candidate, when this was made public, stood as much chance of getting the office as the proverbial snowball.

Gregory coughed. "Very well, madam, if you persist. And now, officers, you will admit that to have handled this lady as she infers I did—notice the broken vase and lamp—that it would have been absolutely necessary for me to have left my seat, eh? Is it not so?"

The men blinked, wondering what was coming. "Why—why I guess yes!"

David Gregory nodded. "Excellent. Men, if you will kindly walk over here carefully I believe that I can show you that I have not left my desk all evening. Look, do you see how heavy and thick the rug is? Good. Do you see how your footprints, even now, leave a deep indentation in it? Do you see the small marks of the lady's feet all about the room? Very good! But do you see any of my footprints?"

For a moment the policemen looked at him open-mouthed. Then the one who had championed the woman muttered a smothered ejaculation and got down on his knees. They both crawled carefully and slowly about the whole room; and, glancing furtively at the woman as they did so, noticed that her face suddenly went a dead white. After several moments they rose.

He who had championed the lady spoke. "Mr. Gregory, sir. By God, sir, I'll swear black and blue that you're right. There's not a mark on the rug that shows your footprint. I—I thought differently at first, sir, I— But—but Lord, sir, what's the game, eh?" And he glared fiercely at the woman.

Gregory rose, standing tall and straight. "I think I know the game," he laughed. He turned toward the woman, looking her sternly in the eyes. "Madam, how much was McGann going to pay you for this—how much? Listen, I'd advise you to confess now, for it will go easier with you and I'll see that your punishment is more lenient! Madam, you'd better confess! Was it McGann?"

The woman, for a moment, looked about the room with a wild, trapped light in her eyes. She saw that she was hopelessly caught. She—

"Was it McGann?"

Then she dropped her head and went to pieces. "Ye—yes," she muttered, her voice low, "it was McGann!" Then, with an angry toss of her head, "But don't think I'm the only one in it. You'd better ask your cook and your maid how much they were paid to leave for a 'wedding' tonight."

Gregory emitted a low whistle. "I see; rather a deep plot, eh? The maid stayed just long enough to hear you discourse on your crippled children! But thank you very much, madam! Officers, you had better escort the lady to the station. I shall be over in the morning to attend to the matter and get her written confession! Ah, you'd better have a few cigars before you go!"

In a moment they were gone, and David Gregory bent over his desk, feverishly writing out the thing that would, for a certainty, give him the election. It was the one big, essential thing that he had needed to make his point strong and positive. When it was over he leaned back, stroked the thick rug snugly with his foot and smiled.

"O rug, I thank thee," he laughed. "By Jove, what a headline it would have made: 'Gregory Fiendly Assaults Defenseless Girl'—phew! Again, O rug, I thank thee!"

Heavy Criminal Docket.

Columbus, April 5—Eleven murder cases, including six first degree, two second degree and two manslaughter cases, are slated for the April term of the criminal courts here. More than 100 transcripts from police court have been filed, and several cases hanging over from the last term make the April term one of the heaviest criminal dockets ever tried in the county.

Destroying Roads.

Dublin, April 5—Flying columns of the Irish army are reported to be operating in Fermanagh, Armagh, Tyrone, Kildare and Queens counties. There has been much destruction of roads and in many cases intimidation has been resorted to. The columns invariably disappear on the approach of crown forces, the official reports say.

Great Britain's Drink Bill.

Washington, April 5—Great Britain's drink bill increased by more than $400,000,000 last year as compared with 1919, says a report to the department of commerce from Consul Hunter Sharp at Edinburgh, Scotland. The amount spent on intoxicating liquors in the United Kingdom in 1920, the consul says, is estimated at $2,285,795,030, as against $1,878,469,000 in 1919. The total, however, is about 21 per cent less than before the war.

Sales Slump.

Chicago, April 5 — Montgomery Ward & Company, through F. H. Campansen, assistant secretary, announced that gross sales for March, 1921, were $7,395,937, a decrease of 37.83 per cent compared with the same month last year.

A SHREWD PLAY FOILED TODAY

laring themselves open to public disapproval on the ground of stubbornness.

The question whether the ... other partners of the triple alliance —rail men and transport workers— will join the miners in a sympathetic strike, was to be decided, tomorrow, at a conference of alliance delegates with power to authorize a general walkout. It is held probable, however, that if parliament accepts the premier's foreshadowed proposition, action will be postponed, especially inasmuch as J. H. Thomas, head of the rail men and most powerful of the labor leaders in Britain, favors a general walkout only as a last extremity after all attempts at settlement have broken down.

A Demonstration.

London, April 5.—The first demonstration of a "military front" against the menace of disorders attending the nationwide coal strike, was made by the government just before parliament convened, this afternoon, to hear Premier Lloyd George's plans and to debate the industrial crisis.

Two battalions of Coldstream guards and a company of Irish guards, summoned from Aldershot, marched through Whitehall in full equipment, including tin hats and preceded by bands, toward the St. James barracks, where they are held for emergencies.

The danger of a general strike of the "triple alliance"—miners, railway men and transport workers—seemed to diminish as the hour for a showdown by the government on its plan approached. Premier Lloyd George was expected to suggest retention of government control of the mines and coal for another month, pending attempts at a settlement.

Behind closed doors in the great Central hall, labor's headquarters, 400 delegates of the transport workers' organization met a delegation of miners. President Gosling, of the miners' union, handed them an appeal which said:

"Your turn comes next. The miners' lockout is the first battle. In the front-line trenches stand the men of the coal fields. Are you going to refuse them your support?"

No action was taken by the transport workers. President Williams of their union, denied this morning's reports that they had decided to strike. The transport men's executive committee is meeting this afternoon and the full delegation is expected to reach a final decision at a meeting scheduled for 10:30, tomorrow morning.

The general interpretation of their attitude, today, was that they are reluctant to precipitate a general tie-up by the triple alliance.

The miners' appeal for the transport workers' support emphasized the hardships that a reduction of wages such as is contemplated by the mine owners would work on the miners and ultimately on all workers.

Its keynote was that if the miners were forced to accept a downward revision, all other industries would soon follow suit.

gerated."

Hugo Stinnes, the German industrial and newspaper magnate, writing in the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung bitterly resents America's reported demands regarding the war-guilt question. He suggests that if America is guilt seeking, she had better go to Paris, London and Petrograd. Stinnes repeats his warning against placing any hopes in America.

French Pleased.

Paris, April 5.—The text of the American note to Germany, published here today, is hailed with jubilation by the French press.

"Germany, checked in her attempt to win President Harding's support," says the Petit Parisian, "will probably cease her evasions. America's loyalty lends a great service to France."

Le Petit Journal says: "Germany is trying to evade her debts forgot that commercial honesty is one of the greatest American virtues."

The only skeptic is Pertinax who objects to America's suggestion to Germany to submit new propositions. He says all that is necessary is that Germany accept the decisions reached at the recent conference in London.

Mrs. Frank Thompson, of Waldo, today was taken to the Jane Case hospital, Delaware, where she will undergo an operation at once for appendicitis. Mrs. Thompson gave birth to a child last week.

Safe Electrical Work

A great deal of unsafe, unsatisfactory electrical work is being done in Marion. We do safe work.

We were the first to advocate inspection. The following letter which we drafted and submitted to council April 4th, 1919, explains our stand:

Marion, Ohio, April 4th, 1919.

To the councilmen of the city of Marion, of Marion County, of the State of Ohio:

The electrical contractors of Marion, Ohio, who have signed this proposal, feel as though it is necessary and important that the city of Marion should have a man appointed by the council of Marion to inspect all electrical wiring, as we feel that it is very necessary that all electrical wiring be done in accordance with the state code, we also recommend that this man who is appointed for this work shall have his office with the fire chief of Marion Ohio, and also recommend that he work under the above named fire chief. We feel that Marion is very much in need of an office of this kind. We, the undersigned electrical contractors, are willing to abide by whatever you deem necessary to insert in this ordinance.

If we do your work you can feel that it is absolutely safe. We guarantee it.

BE SAFE—NOT SORRY.
